This session will examine how to put people at the centre of clean energy transitions, addressing employment, equity and inclusion issues. The discussion will be informed by the work of the IEA's Global Commission on People-Centred Clean Energy Transitions.	This session will explore how to improve the implementation of clean energy transitions across the IEA family. It will examine the mechanisms, institutions and processes that ensure countries have access to effective technical and policy support for developing national energy transition strategies.	This session will consider what fora and institutions are needed to enhance international collaboration within each energy use sector. It will consider what potential coordination gains exist, what sort of collaboration can better access them, and what kind of institutions and fora that requires.	This session will consider how to ensure investment flows are aligned with clean energy goals. It will consider what is needed to strengthen collaboration across the policy and investment communities, and to de-risk renewable finance.	This session will focus on how to ensure that collective aspiration is translated into collective action. The panel will examine how to build confidence within the international system that the policies and strategies that are being put in place over the next 10 years are aligned with long term commitments.
